

Is Facebook For Kids Underage?

Bye Ethan V.

Do you think that kids under thirteen should be on Facebook? If you said yes, then I disagree with you. Facebook is not the best place for kids under the age of thirteen. Here's why it's bad.

Negative language can be very inappropriate, especially if the children are under thirteen years of age. A six year old kid may not necessarily know any bad words. If someone said something bad and unnecessary, the six year old kid may not know it's a bad word and repeat it some ware else. If you think that's bad, just wait until you here the others, there even worse.

Cyber bullying is the next terrible problem that I'm going to talk about. It's one thing if you're being bullied at school, but if you're trying to relax and go talk with your friends on the computer when bullies are waiting to get you there too, that's another thing. Cyber bullies can also find out your password and username, get on your profile, and make up stuff that will hurt your feelings, more than once. How would that make you feel?

The last terrible problem is that strangers are trying to find things out about you. Say if you were maybe, eight years of age. You wouldn't know to say no to someone that you do not know but says "Hey remember me, Mathew, your old best friend. How about you give me your address and I can come and play." or "Hey It's your old friend Dan, come play baseball with me at the park at 5:00. Oh and don't bring your parent's.

That's my opinion on having a Facebook for kids under the age of thirteen. If you still disagree than you are rather crazy, or you need to find some more writing. Read Conner's, and Austyn's writing, and then think it over again.

Sincerely,
Ethan
